The taxicab driver sits in his car
And waits for calls from near and far:
He knows all the crooks and he knows all the rooks;
He knows all the bad roads; he knows all the nooks;
He knows our sorrows; he knows
our joys;
He knows all the girls who are
chasing the boys;
He knows all our troubles; he knows all our stiles;
He knows every man who ducks
from his wife,
If the taxicab driver told half
of that he knows,
He would turn all our friends into
foes;
He would sow a small breeze that would soon be a gale;
Enlist us in trouble—land us in jail;
He would start forth a story,
which gaining in force,
Would cause half our wives to sue
for divorce;
He'd set all our homes mixed up in a fight;
And turn our bright days into sorrow nights;
In fact, he could keep the whole town in a stew,
If he told half of the things he knew.
So here we are—just pay us our
fees,
We won't know a thing but our
ABC'S.
